Time	Key Question
2:10	The first session of the Expanding the Table for Racial Equity learning journey had 80 people from multiple sectors trying to build and broaden a community focused on racial equity. Was this the right thing to do?
3:03	Is there value in starting with people from only a single sector or should you start with people from various sectors?
4:28	What are the core requirements for building trust with a multi-sector community, within a relatively short period of time?
7:17	What is meant by the term “calling people in?”
10:10	How does one negotiate a potentially perilous subject like racial equity?
12:26	Any guidance around core requirements or core approaches for building “connective tissue” among participants?
15:52	What happens when the conversation moves to a place where things become uncomfortable?
18:42	How important is it to have a trained facilitator for racial equity discussions?
21:02	What resources are available to help facilitate racial equity discussions?
